Do No Harm

Article, Author, and Disclosure Information

DOI: 10.7326/0003-4819-88-6-827

Abstract

This essay considers at length some ethical, philosophical implications of the medical maxim, "Do no harm" (or "Primum non nocere"). It helps to designate the practice of medicine as a moral enterprise. It implies that the physician will render due care, but that "due care" will take into account both the risk-benefit ratio and the benefit–detriment equation. The essay closes with a brief discussion of euthanasia considered in the light of the maxim.
Changes in disclosure, adherence and healthcare interactions after the introduction of immediate ART initiation: an analysis of patient experiences in Swaziland.

Do No Harm is a medical series on NBC. It is set to premiere after Celebrity Apprentice from 2012-2013. It is produced and written by David Schulner. Do No Harm is about Dr. Jason Cole, a prominent, kind and good-looking neurosurgeon. He seems to have the perfect life, except for one dirty... Do No Harm finally premiered last night and it was an interesting start to a new series! For those of you new to the wiki and this show, Do No Harm is a Jekyll and Hyde story. "Do No Harm" is produced by Universal Television and Traugott Company. The executive producer/writer is David Schulner ("Desperate Housewives," "The Event"). Peter Traugott ("Ringer") and Rachel Kaplan ("Ringer") are also executive producers.

This site uses cookies. By continuing to use our website, you are agreeing to our privacy policy. Accept