The field of medical toxicology has expanded rapidly in new information and toxins since Ellenhorn and Barceloux wrote the first edition of Medical Toxicology: Diagnosis and Treatment of Human Poisoning. The second edition, written by Matthew Ellenhorn and published posthumously with the assistance of only a few coauthors, is clearly an authoritative work that has been renamed in recognition of the primary author. The new version has been completely rewritten and now spans 67 chapters, 2047 pages, and more than 13,000 references. The text, organized into five sections, gives a national and international approach to principles of poison management, individual drugs, intoxicants in the home, chemical poisons, and natural toxins.

For the laboratorian, the first section on poison management offers a clinician's insight to management of the intoxicated patient. Ellenhorn reaches into both his clinical experience and access to poison control data as he tabulates the toxic syndromes and causative agents. He also provides a practitioner's perspective on diagnostic procedures that, while lacking in technical detail, outlines the interdisciplinary scope of services used in the workup …
